In Virginia, the waiting period for a no-fault divorce is one year from the date of separation, except if there are no minor children between the parties and the parties have executed a written separation agreement, the waiting period is six months. In Virginia, there are three legal grounds for fault-based divorce: (1) adultery, (2) cruelty, and (3) desertion. If you believe that you are entitled to a fault-based divorce, please describe on the following lines the facts and circumstances that you believe would support one of the fault-based allegations.

Please provide a chronological time-line of events leading up to, during and after the date of separation that would support your fault-based grounds. Provide specific dates, names of witnesses or parties involved, and briefly describe each event. Provide a list of evidence (if any) that you have or that you believe you can get that would support each event. Attach more pages, if necessary.
